Code of Conduct of the German Chemical Society

The GDCh pledges itself and its members to uphold freedom, tolerance and integrity in science, in particular, to protect and augment the reputation of chemistry as well as chemistry knowledge and know-how. All GDCh members are well aware that they, as scientists, are particularly responsible for the effects of their occupational work on human beings and nature.

The GDCh and its members promote a sustainable and long-lasting development in society, industry and the environment. They will act, conscious of their responsibility towards future generations. They respect the applicable laws and international conventions regarding their work and their results, and they oppose the misuse of chemistry; for example, they stand against the production of chemical weapons and addictive substances. With the development, application and dissemination of chemical knowledge, the GDCh and its members are obliged to the truth and do not exploit dishonest methods.

Members who violate these principles damage the reputation of science and the profession. They may be barred from the GDCh.

I agree to allow the GDCh to contact me via email in regards to additional information and offers (This consent can be revoked any time).
